Re: Notice of Ex Parte – Misuse of Internet Protocol (IP) Captioned Telephone Service, Telecommunications Relay Services and Speech-to-Speech Services for Individuals with Hearing and Speech Disabilities, CG Docket Nos. 13-24 & 03-123

Dear Ms. Dortch:

On May 11, 2017, Michael Strecker, Vice President of Regulatory Affairs, ClearCaptions LLC ("ClearCaptions") and Paul Besozzi, Squire Patton Boggs (US) LLP, counsel to ClearCaptions, met with Karen Peltz Strauss, Deputy Bureau Chief of the Consumer and Governmental Affairs Bureau ("CGB"); Robert Aldrich, Front Office Legal Advisor, CGB; Susan Bahr, Attorney Advisor, CGB; Elliott Greenwald, Deputy Chief, Disability Rights Office ("DRO"), CGB; Michael Scott, Attorney Advisor, DRO, CGB; and Andy Mulitz, Compliance and Oversight Group Chief, Office of the Managing Director ("OMD") regarding Internet Protocol Captioned Telephone Service ("IP CTS") matters in the above referenced proceedings. Mr. Strecker and Mr. Besozzi met on the same subject matter with Zenji Nakazawa, Acting Public Safety and Consumer Protection Advisor to Chairman Ajit Pai.

After a brief introduction regarding the status of the Company, discussions in both of these meetings focused on the following issues: (1) annual re-registration for IP CTS users; (2) third party certifications; (3) use of Automatic Speech Recognition ("ASR") with IP CTS; and (4) IP CTS rate structure.

1. Annual Re-registration Of IP CTS Users – ClearCaptions fully supported Commission efforts to ensure that eligibility requirements for IP CTS users are enforced and maintained, particularly through monitoring and enforcing existing rules, including those on upfront registration of IP CTS users. However, the Company respectfully opposed the recommendation by one IP CTS provider that the Commission explore a new requirement that each and every IP CTS user be re-registered every year.<sup>1</sup> In its view, such a mandate would cause expenditure of additional costs, which would grow in what is concededly an expanding market. The mandate to provide “functionally equivalent” service does not require such an annual re-registration requirement; it would place an undue burden on consumers to essentially re-certify that they still have a hearing loss necessitating the need to use IP CTS. The resources expended could be better put to efforts to improve IP CTS service through new technologies such as ASR.

2. Third Party Certification Requirements – ClearCaptions expressed support for the use of third party certifications to ensure that only eligible consumers are making use of IP CTS services. However, the Commission must enforce the existing rules regarding impermissible relationships between, for example, audiologists and IP CTS service providers. Clear Captions reiterated that on a number of occasions audiologist offices declined to work with the Company on certifications because the office reported that it had a relationship with a single IP CTS provider. The Commission’s existing rules proscribe joint marketing arrangements between hearing health professionals and IP CTS providers.<sup>2</sup> ClearCaptions believes that such exclusive arrangements are inconsistent with that prohibition and create a potential barrier for ClearCaptions and its customers. The Company noted that should mandatory third party certifications be reinstated, existing certifications obtained – even though not required – should be grandfathered. In connection with any such reinstatement, ClearCaptions urged the Commission to issue a public notice further clarifying permissible relationships between audiologists and IP CTS providers, and should work with consumer groups and IP CTS providers to clarify the qualifications of individuals authorized to make such certifications.

3. ASR – ClearCaptions expressed its belief that it is essential that, when ASR technology is ready for deployment, any transition be seamless to the consumer, while not producing any degradation of service. The Company stressed that in examining any potential readjustment in the IP CTS per-minute rates mechanism, the Commission must consider the inevitable impact on continued investment in ASR development. ClearCaptions conceded that research and development expenditures are not per se included under current categories of IP CTS costs. However, the reality is that capital is necessary to make progress toward an ASR solution and near-term rate reductions would challenge ClearCaptions’s ability to continue its efforts at a critical time. ClearCaptions did support the concept of a separate ASR rate that would incent providers to move minutes to ASR should such movement be the Commission's goal.<sup>3</sup> The Company believed such a financial incentive would motivate providers to invest in ASR technology and create a reward mechanism for doing so.

4. IP CTS Rates – ClearCaptions also expressed its ongoing support for the current Multi-State Average Rate Structure System (“MARS”) for establishing annual IP CTS rates, noting that the projected increase in the per-minute rate this year is less than 2%. The Company agreed that such a market-based rate system remains the optimal method for meeting the statutory mandates for IP CTS, including a rate that “does not discourage or impair the development of improved technology” (e.g., development of ASR).<sup>4</sup>

ClearCaptions added that the record in the 2013 IP CTS Order is several years old and the marketplace has changed dramatically since that record closed, including the entry of ClearCaptions as a separate, independent provider of IP CTS service. At a minimum, that record must be refreshed before there is any dismantling of the MARS mechanism. Indeed, the favored proposal raised in the most recent filing by the TRS Administrator – for a tiered rate – is wholly new to the current open proceeding and therefore a new FNPRM should be commenced.<sup>5</sup> ClearCaptions would expect to actively participate in such a proceeding.

The Company contended that if such an FNPRM were to look at IP CTS provider costs as a basis for rates, the data cited in the RL 2017-2018 Estimate paint an incomplete picture of what it costs to provide IP CTS service due, at least in part, to unrealistic limitations on generally accepted allocations of General and Administrative expenses. In addition, research and development expenses, necessary to the development of ASR, are not considered allowable costs.<sup>6</sup>

Squire Patton Boggs (US) LLP

ClearCaptions further pointed out that if the Commission is to assess costs in setting IP CTS rates it must take into consideration the current marketplace landscape. The reality is that the major existing providers have had several years of MARS-based rates to build their traffic and effectively gain the economies of scale as reflected in Exhibit 1-3 (“IP CTS Historical Cost Rate Data Comparison”) of RL’s 2017-2018 Estimate. Operations on such a scale drive down costs so that rates set on the basis thereof would be well below where any emergent competitor like ClearCaptions can realistically function. The Company argued that for start-up, or emergent, providers, the MARS methodology is still the appropriate methodology for determining reasonable reimbursement rates. As such, if the Commission were to move to some form of cost-based rate to preserve the prospect of competition, it would have to set an emergent provider rate, as proposed for the Video Relay Service.<sup>7</sup>

ClearCaptions shared and reviewed the attached data regarding its estimate of current IP CTS market share, industry cost data, and its own cost data, noting that its costs, at the minute volumes at which it is currently operating, are comparable to historical costs for providers at those operating volumes. As such, comment that “the Commission must make a policy choice on whether to continue subsidizing small providers” seems to be applying a selective memory as to the fact that CaptionCall was at one time the small provider in IP CTS receiving said subsidy.<sup>8</sup> Additionally, for RL to flag start-ups or relatively new IP CTS providers as inefficient<sup>9</sup> seems to be applying the same bias towards providers who have gone through the same cost trend as these so-called “inefficient” providers.

Finally, the Company reiterated that any changes to IP CTS rate mechanisms should be carefully considered, and if adjustments are to be made, they must be phased in over a 3-year period so that providers can, if necessary, adjust their operations accordingly.
